

more important than a backpack?

If a thief steals your teenager's backpack, the law says you can do something about it.

If a predator hijacks your teenager's mind—distorting memories into falsehoods, and convincing your loved one to cut ties with family and friends—the law usually can't help you.

Predatory alienation is real. It can happen to anyone. It hurts teenagers, young adults, and those who love them. It tears families apart.

New Jersey needs a law against such malicious manipulation.
Protect your family. Protect every family in New Jersey.
